Are You Ready to Break 80??

UNCLE SAM WANTS YOU IN THE BREAKING 80 BOOT CAMP

The first ever breaking 80 boot camp has arrived, but first...

HERE'S GOOD NEWS FOR SOME OF US. (I am about to share an "inside secret" that could make you very good at golf...FAST. It admittedly reflects a cynical (although accurate) assessment of the American public.) A few years back around the time of Mother's Day, THE TODAY SHOW featured a story on "mother-daughter bonding boot camp", a group therapy business, where mother-daughter pairs pay to go and share stories, light candles, play games and work out their angst with 100 or so other mother-daughter pairs. Seriously. The last night they roast marshmallows; the final morning they light candles and say one meaningful word to each other.

The same day CNN carried a story about the newest, most pathetic trend: parents, predominately mothers, going with their college age and college grad children to their job interviews, waiting in the waiting rooms or, when possible even going into the interview with them and answering questions on their behalf. Elsewhere, in particularly affluent communities, the popularity of "baby sleep coaches" who camp out in the home to "coach" mommies on getting their babies to sleep. "Thumb-sucking dependency" (the polar opposite of the virtue the original Uncle Sam celebrated: self-reliance) isn't new in America. It's just increasingly dominant.

It started its rise in the 60's and hasn't slowed. In the 70's, when Werner Erhard was asked to sum up his personal growth thing, EST, he said "We preach independence but breed dependence." In the 80's, we chose a President for his ability to "feel our pain" rather than his competence, courage or integrity. Years back Hollywood's "Food Cop," was paid big fees by famous dependent dysfunctionals to make surprise raids on their homes and remove all the junk food.

For those of us looking to dominate our golf buddies and win all their money...this is all very good news. Most of us understand it; although still underestimate its breadth and depth. But EVERY Golfer needs to pay closer attention and strive to capitalize on this.

The national impulse now - from slothful youth to aging boomers - to any need is NOT to go out and hunt and assemble information, marshal resources, investigate, become knowledgeable and empowered to make good decisions and manage one's own affairs. The national impulse in response to each and every need is to find someone to step in and relieve responsibility, make initiative unnecessary.

From a societal standpoint, it will be the eventual collapse of the American empire, rotting away from within, finally dying with merely a whimper. As an American eager to be proud of my country, I find it embarrassing. From a personal standpoint, it is temptation more deadly than alcohol, drugs, etc. that you should refuse to embrace on any level - if you aspire to golf success.

It is, above all else, what separates those of us making up the teeny percentage of the population who possess the ability to take control of our golf game from the vast majority who keep buying the newest Titanium NASA Wizbang Driver; a truthful explanation for the separation you will never hear a single golf club company ever utter, even those who know it, because they are where EST was; it is in their self-interest to breed dependence; individual's' independence is threat to their interests.

It is not a coincidence, incidentally, that the term is "breaking 80." It's not the Da Vinci code. The two words tell you how to get it. Numbers are barriers. They must be broken. As a golfer and athlete, it is up to you to thoroughly understand it, grasp it and capitalize on it. You can't do that by playing and practicing golf as you've always done. Instead, the huge opportunity is in doing something else...
